WHEN TORI Spelling and Dean McDermott wed in 2006, they opted for a barefoot, guest-free ceremony in Fiji. "We would never change that decision," says Spelling today, "but we always knew we would do it again and share it with our friends and family." Little did the couple realize that the event — which took place May 8 in front of about 60 guests at a private Beverly Hills home — would carry such significance. Spelling, after all, has been open about the pair's relationship struggles, and on a recent episode of Oxygen's Tori & Dean: Home Sweet Hollywood, she blasted her actor husband, 43, for prioritizing his hobbies over her and

Postvows, guests tossed white feathers, which Spelling likened to "angel wings."

The 'I Do' Details

Locale Poolside at a Beverly Hills home with a killer view of the L.A. skyline.

Invite list The nearly 60 attendees were simply family and nonceleb pals, including Tori & Dean "guncles" Bill Horn and Scout Masterson.

Reception The couple's "first" dance was to Lonestar's "Amazed," while guests sampled a truffle and sushi bar, as well as short ribs, mashed potatoes and cupcake-shaped lasagna. Later, they noshed from a dessert buffet and drank kava, a Fijian drink Spelling called "herbal Xanax!"

Bling McDermott gave his bride a $15,000 Neil Lane eternity band of 150 diamonds (right). She gave him a ring of white, yellow and rose gold.

Décor Using a yellow, gray and black color scheme, Spelling designed the space to look like a living room, complete with rugs, candles and vases full of calla lilies and dahlias.

China mum blossoms floated in the pool, and art displays, such as a motorcycle painted yellow, represented the pair's passions.

Spelling's goal: "To bring our living space outdoors."
